HONGKONG, NOVEMBER 15TH, 1904.

A PUPIL of KANG YU-WEI has written book on "The Present Crisis" which appears to be about as reactionary as any writings that have lately come under our notice. He seems to have wilfully shut his eyes to the obvious lessons of the past half century, although he has not failed, apparently, to see what has been taking place in neighbouring countries. He writes in strong opposition to the granting of open ports, advises his nationals to have no railways but those they build themselves, urges the authorities to drive out the missionaries as BISMARCK drove out the Jesuits from Germany; advises them to dispense with all foreign officials, and in general espouses the ports. But for the examples of those take shibboleth of China for the Chinese. He or granted, it is doubtful if any Chinese opportunities to foreign Governments to official honesty in the light of a possible period of twenty-six months. "Bargain money" come in and grab territory. His attention ought to be directed to the striking case of Japan, who was compelled to open ports, and whose territorial integrity has been respected. He ought to be made to see why it is that there are no "spheres of influence" in Japan. The Japanese had possibly as great a prejudice against foreign visitors as the Chinese have, but they showed much greater wisdom in their treatment of them. They had the sense to bow to the inevitable, which the Chinese have not; and to make -medicine. She was very sick, and she intelligible. We await (with considerable) needed it.

National integrity is a fine thing, just as individual liberty is, but the day has long since gone by when it could be allowed to assume a character detrimental to others. It is detrimental, of course, to another to be deprived of some privilege that ought in duty to be offered. The liberty of the subject is as sacred as ever, among foreigners, but it has had to be encompassed about by all sorts of legal limitations, which, instead of impairing it, as some have loosely thought, help to conserve it. The man who stands too much upon his individual liberty is generally a curmudgeon, and the society compelled to endure his presence has various right and proper ways of guarding against painful contact with his obtrusive elbows. China was a curmudgeon among the nations, and has been treated as one. The sooner she recognises that her neighbours are not merely land-grabbers, but civilized people willing to associate with her as they associate with each other, the sooner will her troubles be over. Instead of kicking against the pricks, as the ignorant rabble, the bigotted officials, ; and this particular pupil of KANG Yu-wey's are doing, they might do worse | Chinese to the former, and 134 non-Chinese and than listen to the students returning from Japan on the subject of how that nation has turned to account the lore and offerings of able to find such a reactionary writer agreeing that they are any good at all. He admits that railways there must be: only, "let us build them ourselves." That sounds fair, and the fair-minded foreigner is not likely to disagree with it. When and how do the Chinese propose to start making the railways that must be? We will look on and applaud. It is and has lister at St. Petersburg. This means, says the been long apparent that if this work were left to the Chinese themselves, China would report prove correct. be closed until the Greek Kalends, and the trade of the interior unattainable always, ised " to increase the tax on native-grown It has not actually been attempted, but opium to one hundred trels per chest. Tich there would be nothing unfair in using a Liang, the originator of the proposal, thinks little pressure to force railways upon thus to augment the funds for army reorganisa-China. It would certainly be no more unfair than the treatment of the British parent by the British Government. You must educate your children, he is told. If he pleads that he cannot afford it, very well, the Government will do it for him; but the child must go to school. The Chinese Government is the illiterate parent : | duellist. these re-actionaries its truant children sadly in need of education.

With regard to the proselytising intru-"there may be good missionaries among them" is too pretty to be spoiled by ing his duties. comment. His complaint that "America tries to get power by showing kindness and so getting the good will of the people" is another typically Chinese sentiment. The Good Samaritan feeding the cur, "he is trying to win our good will. One of this writer's peroratory outbursts reads: "Be your own masters, and not mere shroffs and toadies to Western masters and rulers." If the Chinese were their own masters, if they, that is to say, could master their stupid passions and prejudices, cultivate a little more faith in human nature. and emulate some of the methods of these · Western masters and rulers," the "shroff's and toadies" might show more inclination to return within Chinese jurisdiction. But Peking is corrupt, the provincial officials are thieves, and all outside the "shroffs and toadies" are as densely stupid and ignorant as they were a thousand years ago. Therefore the more sensible, business-like Chinese continue to prefer their investments of money, brains, or energy under a rule that experience has proved honest to them. This they find in the foreign settlements, and so one way to spread those glad tidings—that an honest administration is a possibility, and not merely a Confucian dream-is to have more foreign settlements, or more open would yet have been brought to consider policy as well as an ideal.

The ups and downs of street perambulation in Hongkong are a sore trial to the shortwinded; but it should not be forgotten that they prevent the motor car nuisance, which Shanghai appears to be suffering. 12th November. HIS MAJESTY'S BIRTHDAY.

The birthday of His most Faithful Majesty King Edward VII, was celebrated in Canton. The weather being pleasant, everything went off as agreeably as possible. Although there were not many illuminations or fireworks as in ter has called on M. Delcasse in reference | previous years, still the occasion was not less jolly and enthusiastic. In the forenoon there was an official reception in the British Consulate-General. In the afternoon, at 3.30 p.m., there were sports on the tennis grounds, in which many ladies and children also took part. At the termination of the sports the Consul-General and Mrs. Campbell proceeded to distribute the prizes. A Portuguese Band from Macao was present to enliven things with music. A number of Chinese officials of high class in their gorgeous robes were also present. After lunch, they were photographed in group. In the evening there was a ball in the Canton

> THRILLING STORY OF ROBBERY WITH VIOLENCE.

In the district of Tin Pak at the prefecture of Kochow, lying in Lat. 21 degrees 48 min, and long, 410 degrees 26 min, there is a market town known as Sui Ting, in which there are about three thousand houses and shops, and a mandarin yamen, and not long ago Messrs Musso's Steam Navigation Company had established an agency there under the charge of its manager, Mr. Fillippe Hungery. In that market town of Sui Tung the natives are doing a pretty thriving business in rice, brown sugar, salt, pigs, and fowls, from which Canton. Kong Mun, and other outlying districts obtain their supply, and three steamers. Po Our Wing Hang, and Lucia, are running weekly to take passengers and cargoes. On the morning of November 2, at about 6-a.m., a band of over one thousand robbers, consisting of local banditti, Triad Society men, and disbanded soldiers, arrived with quick-firing rifles, revolvers, axes, and swords. They broke open the principal gate and entered. The brigand chief, a fat, villainous-looking man of about sixty, dressed in a gaudy mandarin robe with red button and feathers, was carried in au official chair by eight bearers. As they entered they went to the mandarin yamen, where was a To Sz, or captain in command of about twenty soldiers, and smashed the tables and chairs. The soldiers ran aw y. The robbers collected all the firearms that were there, and then marched to the agency of Messrs Musso and Company. They broke open the door and fired shots into the house, the manager, Mr. Fillippe Hungery, being asleep upstairs. As soon as he was awakened by the shot he got up. and ran with his wife from roof to roof until they reached a lane and jumped down. They look shelter in a poor woman's matshed. THE INTERPORT CRICKET MATCH.

THIRD DAY.

Beautiful sunny weather favoured the cricketers on the opening of the third day, and as the morning were on, the crowd of spectaters gradually increased. The smoke from the Naval Yard was not so obtrusive this time. The Shanghai batsmen, on returning to the pavilion, complained of the wicket not being so good as on the previous days, and the manner in which the ball bumped certainly testified to

On drawing stumps on Saturday Shanghai had a total of 138 runs for 8 wicke s. Wallace and bats, again went in yesterday morning. Wallace had a score of nine on, whilst Drummore and then fell a victim to Bird. C. C. succeeded in scoring a run before Drummond require. was bowled by Bird.

The fielding generally was not good.

The second innings for the Hongkong team was opened by R. Hancock and C. M. G. as the case required. Burnie, and Hancock again got set a d treated the bowling lightly. From a ball by Potter, Burnie played high and was caught by Turnbull at point. Heath took his place, and getting well under Lanning's balls drove several of them to boundary. He treated Turnbull in a similar manner, until, missing a drive, his wicket went down. The score new stood two for 47, the retiring batsman having made 33. J Dixon filled the vacancy, but his stay was short. He had scored six when Turnbull took his wicket. Arthur then made his advent, but' did not stay long. He skied a ball from Turnbull, which was caught by S. Wallace. His score was two. Lumsden now accompanied Hancock, who from Turnbull's bowling sent a few to the boundaries. Potter then bowled an over and took Lumsden's wicket before he had made a score

With the fifth wicket down the score stood five for 73 when H. Hancock took the bat with his brother, and driving Potter's second ball made his first score. From Turnbull's bowling R. Hancock dangerously skied a ball, but no fielder being near enough, still retained his bat. Lanning again went on for an over and rolled the balls in with-his-usual-quickness, but thehatsmen drove them about the field. Turnbull again tried his skill, but the ball was three times sent to the boundary, the third time bringing the home team's score up to the century.

C. C. Dow was then put on for an over, and the changing of the bowlers proved disastrons to the Hongkong team. R. Hancock up the score of 35. There were still four wickets to fall but stum ps were drawn and the cricketers adjourned to

After passing through the Channel the course may have been altered, but I do not like to give evidence on that joint as I was forward. I did not see the Wongkoi any more to know it till, after I was told that it was the Wongkoi we had collided with. A few minutes later I saw the signal lights of the steamer with which we collided, and thought she was proceeding out of the harbour on a west-rly course. I saw what I took to be two white mast-head lights and a red side-light. When I first identified them they were about two points on our port bow. After this the light drew ahead a bit. It is exceedingly hard to give an estimate of how far the lights were off; I should say half a mile. The night was dark and the hull of the ship could not be seen at all. Continuing, witness said-In a ship of this size the height of the forward (lower) mast-head light above the deck would be about forty feet. The lower anchor light, usually hoisted on the halyards of the flag-staff at the stern, at a height of 10 to 15ft. above the deck. I could not see the ship's hull at all; I know of no system by which I can tell the actual height of the lights. When I first saw the lights they were on the port bow; they were afterwards ahead. I should say we were under the influence of starboard helm. I do not know if we were still swinging when the collision occurred. We struck at a slight angle, say of seventy degrees towards the stern at the moment of impact. We must have scraped a little for ward. The anchor had the effect of checking the ship's way. The vessels were only a few feet distant when I applied the break. I Looking down the Ugina's bow I could not see what damage had been done to the Wongkoithat speaks how difficult it was to distinguish things under the conditions. The electric lights on the Wongkor's deck blinded me. I should say we were about a hundred feet from the Wongkoi when the anchor was let go and ten feet when the break was applied.

Witness was not able to say whether the Wongkoi moved or not during the time he saw her. During the latter three minutes before red light, and thought the vessel to be under the collision there was no perceptible alteration in the bearing of the Wongkoi. The order to go astern was promptly carried out by the engine room, and he felt the vibration of the vessel thereby caused. The Ujina was deep loaded. The Chief Officer was recalled and gave evidence regarding the log-book; and the_red light on the fairway buoy.

Robert Campbell, the chief engineer, was sworn. He is now the chief engineer of the s.s. Pentacota, of the same company. He said the Ujina had the ordinary horse power of a cargo steamer and gave other evidence regarding the engines, which were first class. It would take from lifteen to twenty-five seconds to reverse the engines from ahead to astern. When the engines were reversed they were opened right out After the collision he saw the water being churned up by the Wongkoi's propeller. He had seen the red light in question and took to be the port light of a vessel.

Cross-examined, witness said the normal "full-speed" would be 83 to 9 knots, but after he received half-an-hour's notice before stopping steam was allowed to go down, making a difference of about half-a-knot in the "full speed." The "half speed" would be 6½ knots It took three to three and a half minutes to stop the vessel, when going at half speed.

James Boyd, the third engineer, corroborated the chief-engineer's statements. He was not looking to see which way the churned-up water of the Wongkei was travelling. He simply observed that the propeller was moving.

The Court was adjourned till eleven o'clock this morning.

Bombay is the home of Indian cricket and owns a amber of excellent cricketers, both English and Native. Among the latter, the Parsees sionie European gymkhana or club can beat a representative team of Parsees. When Lord Harris, himself a keen cricketer, was Governor of Bombay, he hit upon the idea of arranging every year a march to be played between the best Et glish cricketers of the whole of the Bombay Presidency and a representative team Parsees, the last of which kind of match was played on the ground of the Bombay Gymkhana about three months ago, and the Parsees were victorious. This is now an annual fixture, and during the three days of the game nearly twenty thousand eager spectators gather together on the ground to witness the contest. Thus far, our interport fixtures have been confined to the Straits only, but if the organisers could arrange for the next year to invite a Parsec team that every year plays the Presidency to play against a combined team of the Far East (Colombo included), there would be a spectacle worth witnessing, the like of which Hongkong, which should be chosen as the centre, has never seen Lefore and which keen cricketers would ardently wish for every year.—Yours, &c.

The Straits Times on the 2nd instant told this interesting story in its editorial columns:-Over five years ago, in March, 1896, certain Singapore sportsmen will recall being interested in a sensational picture of local interest which appeared in the Illustrated London News. It was entitled "Count de Geloe's Narrow Sliave," and represented the smash-up in which that plucky Frenchman was nearly killed when he was in a fair way to win the Liverpool Grand National—a classic events that has so far never been captured by a foreigner-with the celebrated half-bred Pistache. It was a memorable disaster in a great race, wherein twenty started and six fell, and which was won hy Manifesto. In the M. de Geloe, who was mixed up in the smash, the local; horsemen recognised the merry- Borneo to. bacco planter of ten or a dozen years before, whose instincts in the matter of horse-racing and horses generally seemed far more Irish than French. M. de Geloe left here in 1887, and between that year and 1899 he hunted and raced in every corner of England and France where he could enjoy "the sport of kings." When he got over the disastrous accident on Pistache, it was found that the fall had injured that particular convolution of his brain-the Third Convolution, the scientists call it—which controls the muscles of speech. He could only gabble spasmodically and imperfectly. M. de Geloe pondered the matter over in his head, and reflected that perhaps it was time to try an entirely-new-mode-of-life. Accordingly-he-sought the nearest monastery of Jesuits and then and there offered to enter the Order and become a missionary. The experienced padres to whom he applied, however, threw a damper upon his ardour. They explained that hi difficulty of speech would handicap him in the mission field; so he went away to give further thought to the matter. Then he had various interviews with the Father Superior, whose encouragement was not strong, but who recommended him to set down a date whereon he could go to a species of religious retreat for a little while, and pender over his determination in solitude amid ecclesiastical surroundings This the stricken horseman agreed to do, and he went forth to pass the time as best he could in the interim. The last day of his comparative liberty duly dawned, and the first thing that met M. de Geloe's eye in the morning paper when he had finished his first cup of coffee was the announcement of a race meeting where a mount awaited him. M. de Geloe thereupon ceased brooding. He uttered the then fashionable equivalent for "What-ho!" and started off to the meeting. He secured his mount, and faced the flag and got well away; thenfollowing the precedent of his last race-he came another tremendous cropper, They picked him up and carried him off the conres. His head was cut, and they feared his skull was smashed this time. But it wasn't. As soon as his scattered senses came back, he could talk as well as ever. The second crash had knocked that wretched Third Cerebral Convolution back have gathered together in Hongkong, it would into its right place again, and save for a not be out of place to throw out a suggestion split scalp and an aching head, the explanter was as sound as a nut. That evening-with a bandage around his head, and a pinkish eye-M. de Geloe again presented himself to the Jesuits. "A miracle?" said they when he addressed them. "A horse race!" replied M. de Geloe. "But here I am anyhow." he added. And M. de Geloe entered have proved themselves the champions, and no the Order. Why this tale, at this late day? The reason is purely local, and, in view of the recent race meeting here, it may arouse especial interest. Moreover, among the passengers who arrived from Europe by the P. and O. mail steamer Chusan last Saturday, and spent the night with friends in Singapore ere proceedingon the voyage to Hongkong, was one who figured on the passenger list as the Rev. M. de Geloe, S.J. It was the same M. de Geloe. formerly tobacco planter of Borneo, and the rider of Pis'acbe in the great smash-up that spoiled Manifesto's Grand National. He is en
